By David Walker

In this groundbreaking and passionate work, David Walker, a free Black man living in Boston, issued a powerful call for the abolition of slavery and the empowerment of African Americans.

Walker's "Appeal" was first published in 1829, and it quickly became a source of inspiration and encouragement for abolitionists and activists fighting for racial justice.

In his "Appeal," Walker argued that slavery was a sin against God and a violation of the fundamental rights of all human beings. He called on African Americans to resist oppression and to demand their freedom and equality.

Walker's words were both powerful and provocative, and they helped to galvanize the abolitionist movement in the United States.

His "Appeal" remains an important historical document and a testament to the indomitable spirit of the human struggle for freedom and equality.
