The Syriac Aristotelian tradition emerged as part of the broader Hellenization of the Syriac world, a process that began in the 2nd century BC. As Syriac scholars encountered Greek philosophy, they recognized its potential to illuminate their own understanding of the world and to provide a framework for theological inquiry. The translation of Aristotle's works into Syriac played a crucial role in this process, making his ideas accessible to a wider audience.

Syriac scholars did not merely translate Aristotle; they engaged with his ideas critically, adapting and interpreting them to suit their own cultural and religious context. This resulted in a unique blend of Aristotelianism and Syriac thought, which influenced not only the development of philosophy in the Syriac world but also the transmission of Aristotelianism to other Eastern traditions, such as the Arabic and Persian.
