In September 1861, the 4th Wisconsin took part in the bloody Battle of Bull Run, where they faced the overwhelming firepower of Confederate forces. Despite being outnumbered, they fought tenaciously, earning the admiration of both allies and adversaries alike. In the aftermath of Bull Run, the regiment was reorganized and its numbers supplemented by the addition of a cavalry company, transforming them into a formidable combined arms unit.

A Trail of Triumphs and Tribulations

Throughout the war, the 4th Wisconsin Infantry and Cavalry participated in numerous pivotal campaigns, including the grueling siege of Corinth, the brutal battles of Shiloh and Stones River, and the historic Battle of Gettysburg. Their unwavering courage and tenacity were repeatedly tested as they faced some of the most skilled and determined Confederate armies.

The 4th Wisconsin was also instrumental in securing the vital transportation hub of Chattanooga, Tennessee, and in the subsequent pursuit of the Confederate army led by General Braxton Bragg. In these campaigns, the regiment's cavalry company proved invaluable, conducting daring raids and providing critical reconnaissance.

A Legacy of Valor and Sacrifice

The Civil War exacted a heavy toll on the 4th Wisconsin Infantry and Cavalry. Over the course of the conflict, hundreds of its members were killed, wounded, or captured. Their sacrifice, however, was not in vain. Their unwavering dedication to their cause helped preserve the Union and ensure the future of a free and just America.

In the aftermath of the war, the 4th Wisconsin Infantry and Cavalry was mustered out of service, its members returning home as honored veterans.
